Re: Polymaster use of Braun Intertec trademark

Dear Mr. Sayers:

In recent correspondence we, on behalf of our client Braun Intertec Corporation, questioned Polymaster's characterization of Braun Intertec testing on Polymaster's R501 product. After considering your response and further investigating the matter, it appears that former Braun Intertec Portland, Oregon staff tested your R501 with standard concrete block in 1996 and 1997 and sent the results to Polymaster by letters dated January 26, 1996, August 6, 1997, and September 10, 1997.

Those letter reports describe valid Braun Intertec test results that Polymaster may publish in connection with its marketing of its R501 product. That license to use the Braun Intertec trademark is continuing as long as the R501 product on the market is functionally the same as was tested. We do request that you refer to the standards in effect at the time and dates of the relevant test reports in your marketing.

There was a separate testing for R501 in 1998 and 1999. You have advised us that R501 was applied to non-standard concrete block. That testing was discussed in a February 22, 1999 Braun Intertec letter. You have represented that the 1999 testing did not have any bearing on the earlier tests in 1996 and 1997. We cannot confirm the details of the testing or the results because of the passage of time and because we no longer employ the staff who were involved. Based on a reading of the reports, your interpretation is plausible.

Thank you for your response in clarification. We consider this matter closed. You may circulate this letter as you deem appropriate.

Sincerely yours,
Purdue & Awsumb P.A.
